The World Health Organization (WHO) has recommended that every mother who gives birth in a health facility should be given counseling on nutrition. However, many countries in sub-Saharan Africa, South Asia and East Asia have inadequate access to this nutrition advice. One of the strategies being used to improve access to nutrition counseling for pregnant and lactating women is the integration of nutrition components into existing programing such as the Postnatal Care (PNC) Program. Current WHO PNC Program training packages lack nutrition information and counseling, as does their electronic training tools. This paper presents the creation of a nutrition knowledge questionnaire based on literature review and the results of qualitative interviews and focus groups with postnatal women and health providers in India, Kenya and Tanzania. The content of the questionnaire was then evaluated by a group of nutrition researchers and program managers from the maternal and child health field and by two nutrition students. The nutrition questionnaire and electronic training tool were then pilot-tested on health workers and health extension workers at a PNC training, in collaboration with a Tanzanian nongovernmental organization. The nutrition knowledge questionnaire and training tool were found to be acceptable and feasible for use in maternal and child nutrition. The nutrition knowledge questionnaire provides information about postnatal women's and health

A mobile communication system and a mobile telecommunication system are two different concepts. A mobile communication system can be a wired or wireless cellular communication system. The mobile telecommunication system is generally a telecommunication system which includes a mobile or cellular system. In the following description, the term "mobile communication system" will mainly be used for the cellular communication systems. A mobile communication system comprises mobile terminals, such as mobile stations (MS), and base stations. A base station comprises two to five base transceiver stations (BTS), depending on the service area and the operator. Usually, a base station comprises two radio frequency sets, which are used for transmission and reception of radio signals, i.e. a transmitting radio frequency set (TRFS) and a receiving radio frequency set (RRFS). Each radio frequency set is assigned to a specific area. In a cellular radio communication system a plurality of mobile communication systems generally exist. In order to reach a mobile communication system, the mobile station can connect to any base station in the mobile communication system. In this case it is necessary for the mobile communication system to identify and register the mobile station with the base station in order to reach the mobile station. The base station will then identify the mobile station and, depending on the interface between the base station and the mobile station, the mobile station may be served by a special service of the mobile communication system, for example a particular service or a special service, or the mobile station will be found in the base station and re-routed to the base station which is connected with the mobile communication system. A radio interface system is a network architecture used for the transmission of control and signalling information in a radio communication system. In a mobile communication system, the radio interface can be divided into layers such as the physical layer, the data link layer, the network layer and the application layer. The information transmitted from the base station to the mobile station is transmitted on a physical layer. The data which is transmitted by the mobile station are transferred on a data link layer and the application layer operates through a host processor. The 50b96ab0b6
